REPORT SHOWS ATTENDANCE OF SCHOOLS FOR OCTOBER

Six schools in the Third Supervisory district maintained an average attendance of 100 per cent during the month of October, according to the report of Superintendent Frank H. Smith. Two of these schools, districts 11 and 15 of Woodhull, also had a 100 per cent average for the month of September.

Mr. Smith is offering a certificate for the school in each township which maintains the highest average attendance during the year. The districts having the highest average during October were: Addison No. 3, 99 per cent; Cameron No. 1, 99 per cent; Rathbone No. 7, 100 per cent; Rathbone No. 8, 100 per cent; Thurston No. 8, 100 per cent; Woodhull No. 8 100 per cent. Also the two Woodhull schools mentioned above. District No. 1, Addison, had an average of 96 pr cent, and district No. 1, Woodhull, had an average of 97 per cent for the month. Both of these averages are good for schools with academic departments.

Attention is called to the members of the O. E. S. for the next meeting, Saturday, Dec. 6. This meeting will be conducted by past matrons. A program will be given and refreshments served.

CORNING HUNTERS PAY FINES IN ADDISON

Two Corning hunters paid fines in Addison justice court yesterday for hunting on posted land. The two men, Phillip Miller and Anthony Miller, were arrested by game warden Ray Reed for hunting on the posted lands of Enos Hadlock. They were arraigned before justice of the peace D. J. Colbert and pleaded guilty to the charge of hunting on the Hadlock farm last Saturday. Both men paid fines of $10.00.

Farmers in this vicinity will be glad to see that this law has been put to test and the guilty parties punished. A number of farmers posted their lands this last fall, and most hunters took care not to trespass on them. However, there has been an occasional complaint of hunters seeking game on posted land, and this case should prove a warning to others who have been inclined to disregard land owners' rights.

ENTERTAIN FRIENDS

Mr. and Mrs. George Moore entertained a large number of friends at their home on Thanksgiving Day. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Minier, daughters Ruth and Kathryn, Mr. and Mrs. James Minier of Wellsburg; Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Canvass Now On For Christmas Seals

The 24th annual sale of tuberculosis seals is now in full sway. A house to house canvass will begin this week and it is hoped that everyone will at least buy a few seals to help this worthy cause. If you are not at home when the committee calls, seals may be obtained from Mrs. Benjamin R. Croft, Mrs. Arthur Hackett, Misses Minnie Miller and Margaret Leach, or Mrs. Earle Brown. No letters will be sent out by the Steuben County Committee this year so seals will have to be purchased from the local committee.

The quota for Woodhull this year is $35. Last year the quota was not met in full and owing to the fact that the last few years, Woodhull has sent from three to five children to the Anderson Health Home, we should give the project our whole hearted support.

POWERFUL MOB SCENES IN "THE BIG HOUSE"

"The Big House", Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's much heralded drama of penitentiary life and prison riots, is the attraction which will open Sunday at the Star theatre. The picture is a sensational expose of the cause leading to recent prison riots, climaxed with an actual riot in which a hundred men battle. Prisoners in revolt and besieged in a cell house, where they kill guards and drop them out one by one until quelled with army tanks. As a contrast a romantic love story is woven into the grim tale.

Chester Morris, Wallace Beery and Robert Montgomery play the three central roles as the convict cell mates, and Lelia Hyams appears as the heroine, whose love eventually redeems Morris. A sensational mess hall riot, escape of Morris in the prison morgue van, his recapture, his rescue of the guards during the riot, are silent points in the picture. Montgomery, as the college boy sent to prison for an auto accident and herded with hardened offenders until he becomes worse than they, has a remarkable part in the story. Others in the cast are Lewis Stone, Karl Dane, DeWitt Jennings, George Marion, J. C. Nugent, Claire McDowell and Mathew Betz.

WOODHULL GIRL SCOUTS TO GIVE ENTERTAINMENT

The Girl Scouts of Woodhull, Troop 1, will hold that long, expected entertainment Friday evening, Dec. 5, as part of the M. E. Church bazaar, at the Community Hall in Woodhull. The girls will also assist the ladies of the church with their bazaar. The girls hope that everyone in the vicinity who believes in scouting will come and help them show their appreciation to the Methodist Church for giving them a share. Dinner will be served by the ladies of the church beginning at 5:30 P. M. The entertainment will follow immediately after the supper. Come over to the dinner and stay to see the Girl Scouts.

Perkins Well Reaches Depth Of 2300 Feet This Week

Drilling on Fairview Hill Sinks 750 Feet in Little Over One Week—A Few Farms Being Leased at Fancy Prices as Companies Bid for Hold in This Section.

Drilling on the well at the Perkins farm near Addison, progressed faster the past ten days than during any previous like period. Tuesday night the drill had penetrated 2,300 feet, a gain of 750 feet since last reported in this paper.

Figuring on the basis of the strike at the Farmington well, the Perkins well should be approximately half way down now. Gas was struck at Farmington only a trifle below 4,000 feet. Although the physical elevation is somewhat higher there than on Fairview Hill, this is probably compensated by the slope of the oil sands which gradually grow shallower as they travel northward. Of course the anti-cline which is pierced by the Perkins well may not contain gas, and drilling may proceed to a deeper level where oil might be struck. The whole thing is problematical. Geogolists can lay down certain fundamental laws about these different folds on the earth's crust, and tell where oil pools should lay, but the matter is not removed from the realm of guesswork until a drill actually taps the oil.

A little more activity has been noted in land leasing the last few weeks. Two farms just east of Addison were recently leased at the rate of $2.00 per acre, with an eighth royalty to be paid the owners on any gas or oil struck. Rumors have circulated concerning the possible leasing of a 2,000 acre block just west of here by a California company. Land prices in the vicinity of Elkland and Farmington being greatly in demand. A number of leases have changed hands recently on which the sellers netted a handsome profit.

Meanwhile, the many oil companies holding leases in this vicinity are sitting back and watching what happens at the Perkins well. Geologists feel certain that a large oil pool centers near Addison, and any promising kind of a strike near here is sure to precipitate a real boom. One western company is ready to make leases in which they agree to drill 7,500 feet, making a real test for oil.

NEW YORK DEALERS MIX MILK AND TAXI-CABS

New York, Nov. 29—Deputy Attorney General William B. Groat has announced that he will turn over evidence gathered in his investigation of the Harlem & Bronx Milk Dealers' Association to District Attorney Thomas C. Crain for action.

This decision follows Mr. Groat's looking into the affairs of the Harlem & Bronx Association, which was organized last summer by Aaron Sapiro, widely known as a lawyer and once active in organizing farmers' cooperative organizations in the west, south and Canada.

The Harlem & [illegible] ers Association is [illegible] York milk dealers. Evidence brought out in a hearing held by Mr. Groat this week showed that each member was required to pay an initiation fee of $1 per can on his average daily sales for the week of July 19, 1930, and thereafter five cents per can on every can of milk handled.

Samuel Roth, president of the Distribution Stabilization Corporation, testified that his organization had entered into a contract with the Harlem & Bronx Association to "manage the affairs of the association, help in organization and securing new members, aid in expansion and carry out the decisions of the arbiter."

Roth testified that his salary is $15,000 a year. Sapiro, he said, as arbiter receives a salary of $250 a week, and Sapiro's law office is also paid $600 a month for legal work.

In examining the check book and records of the Stabilization Corporation, Deputy Attorney General Groat brought out that while Roth has been president only four months he had received more than $10,000. Roth explained that he was allowed his expenses and necessary expenditures.

Some of the money was used to pay men who had done work for Roth in connection with an attempt to organize New York's taxi cab industry, it was brought out. Mr. Groat seemed surprised that money raised from the milk industry be used to organize the taxi cab business. Roth explained that it did not matter how the money was used so long as his Distribution Stabilization Corporation carries out its contract with the Harlem & Bronx Association.

The name of Larry Fay, who once attempted to organize New York's milk business and who has also tried to organize taxi cabs as well as once running a night club, was brought into the case when Mr. Groat asked Barnett Metzger, president of the Harlem & Bronx Association, whether he knew that Fay had urged some milk dealers to join the Association.

Metzger replied that he had never been called by Fay, but that he had heard that some dealers received such calls.

MRS. TEN BROECK HOSPITAL PATIENT

Mrs. Ray Ten Broeck is a patient in the Robert Packer Hospital at Sayre, Pa., where she underwent two operations on Wednesday of last week. Her condition is reported as favorable.

"MOTHER" JONES

One of the greatest champions of organized labor passed away this week when "Mother" Jones, died at the ripe old age of 100 years. "Mother" Jones through her activities in behalf of the laboring man, became a household name throughout the nation. Born at a time when oppression of laborers was general throughout the coal regions, this militant woman devoted the greater part of her life to alleviating conditions she deemed intolerable.

Considered a radical in her time, "Mother" Jones was glad to suffer any physical discomfort demanded by her work for the cause. Thrown into prison many times, she only worked the harder for her beloved men when liberty was restored. She was a Joan d'Arc of the laboring classes, but unlike the immortal French girl, the work she set hand to, took decades for accomplishment, instead of a few weeks.

Championing a cause with few friends, "Mother" Jones lived to see her protege become a husky organization amply able to take care of itself without further need for sacrifice. During the span of her life she was able to see laboring men spring from a condition which often bordered on the most abject poverty, to a life of shortened working hours, improved conditions and wages that will buy luxuries that could not have been attained by a king when this woman was born. "Mother" Jones' passing will be mourned by those who knew her, but the mourning will be tempered with the knowledge she had a full and complete life that was crowned with the satisfaction of seeing the fulfillment of that for which she worked.

GOLDEN RULE WEEK

With poverty and unemployment widespread even in fertile and prosperous quarters of the world, the need of children in areas affected by drought, famine, war and economic exploitation are greater than ever. The Golden Rule Foundation of New York urges generous contributions to these neglected ones on Golden Rule Sunday, December 7, and throughout Golden Rule week, December 7 to 14.

Areas of need in the world for which appeals are being stressed are Porto Rico, where 200,000 children are found to be suffering from prolonged undernourishment; China, with its millions of innocent child victims of war, famine and destitution; India, with her age-old wrongs, and with new problems of child labor in its great mill centers; Europe with thousands of uprooted families, expatriates, for whom the future is black unless the world gives a care; America herself with at least a million underprivileged children in the Southern Mountains cut off from education and normal childhood by isolation, poverty and neglect; a vast and growing army of Child Migrants, who trek from the Mexican border to the Canadian line harvesting and canning the fruit and vegetable crops, homeless and without education and living a joyless childhood; neglected American Indian children, wards of our Government in boarding schools that have given them neither proper food, education nor training for life; and, in Mexico the children in 7,000 rural villages, where schools have but recently been established in an effort to stamp out illiteracy.

FRUGAL SHOPPING

Some people consider that the advice "trade at home" is a trite saying without rhyme or reason. They rush away from home to spend their dollars, without waiting to investigate what may be obtained at the stores of their home merchants. More often than they ever dream, these same people are paying dearly for failing to see what they could do at home.

Not very long ago a man in a town not more than a hundred miles from here, wanted to buy a new stove. He priced the stove at his home hardware and was told he could buy it for $150. A few days later this man saw the same stove in the show window of a city store and stepped in to inquire the price. Needless to say he was astonished to learn the city hardware dealer asked $210 for the exact stove he could buy at home for $150. It didn't take long for this man to decide to buy the stove at home.

What happened in that case, happens in many similar cases in this town the year around, only there is often a different sequel to the story. A person may decide to buy an article and rush out of town and buy it without looking at home, never knowing he may be paying more than the home town merchant asks for the same article. In that case everyone loses; often the buyer's loss is as great as the loss of the merchant who lost a potential sale.

The merchants of Woodhull have accumulated large stocks of merchandise in preparation for the Christmas shopping days that are now at hand. Do yourself the justice of looking thru the home stores for Christmas ideas before you go out of town; if you do not find everything you need then local merchants will be the last to blame you for seeking it farther afield. Stores in smaller towns have a lower overhead expense than large city stores and in many instances are able to sell for less. You owe it to yourself to see what you can save, by investigating the home market first. You may lose money by going away.

COOPERATION FOR THE SMALL FARMER

Most of the public discussion of the Federal Farm Board and its work thus far has centered around the problems of the large-scale growers of staple crops and livestock. The small farmer, growing a few potatoes, several different kinds of other vegetables, marketing a few cases of eggs, a small amount of fruits, must have wondered, if he thought about it at all, where he fits into the new scheme of things.

How can the small general farmer get the benefit of the cooperative marketing plan on which the Farm Board is based? Is there any thing in it at all for him?

Naturally, the Farm Board began with the largest and most pressing problems. It is getting down to the small grower now, and the work of organizing these small farmers into local commodity cooperatives is beginning. It is going to take a lot of time, and there are doubtless many farmers whose operations and locations will not enable them to join with their neighbors in organizing marketing associations. But those who can and will do so are the ones who will get the most good out of the new system.

For the information of farmers interested in the marketing of fruits and vegetables the Board has issued a pamphlet of instructions for organization. It is called "Bulletin Number One". and will be sent free to anybody who writes for a copy to the Director of Information, Federal Farm Board, Washington, D. C.

SILVER THREADS AMONG THE GOLD

There is plenty of proof that more people are constantly arriving at the "upper age level", or in that sphere when the silver threads are entwined among the gold, according to the State Department of Public Health of Illinois.

In an official statement given prominence in Washington the Illinois Health Department attributes the extension of the average life expectancy to modern methods of living which result in saving the lives of infants, children and young adults. After being nourished, nurtured and guided through their young and sensitive years, young men and young women are pretty apt, if they continue to live properly, to have longer lives, than their parents and grandparents.

Spanish farmers have asked their government to experiment in the use of olive oil as a motor lubricant. Brazil finds its coffee surplus too heavy to carry. The British and Dutch are in trouble with an enormous over-supply of rubber. The truth is Collier's comments, that surpluses of agricultural products are a world-wide problem which cannot be solved in terms of domestic politics.

The Way of Life By BRUCE BARTON

Victory

THREE interesting and very different experiences occured one Sunday last fall.

In the morning we sat in the chapel of an historic academy in New England and, while the preacher prayed, we peeked a little. Our eyes wandered over the bowed heads of the boys; our imaginations were busy with thoughts of what might be in store for them.

Riding back to New York on the train we read an impressive speech by the President of the United States.

When the train stopped at Hartford we looked out of the window to see a crowd filling the air with rice and confetti, and presently an embarrassed but happy young couple hurried through the car and into a drawing room.

Of these events—the prayer in the academy chapel, the speech of Mr. Hoover, the marriage of an unknown and apparently common-place young couple—which was the most important? Which will leave the most lasting impression on history?

No one can possibly tell.

If every child and every happening were labelled "This is important" or "This is unimportant" the business of living would soon lose its zest. The eternal uncertainty of it keeps it exciting.

For example, a King of England, coming down from Scotland, stopped for refreshment at a little town called Scrooby. The young man who waited on the table was so obscure that the king probably never noticed him. But who is more important in the light of history, the weak King James I of England or the strong young man William Brewster who sailed on the Mayflower and became the first governor of Massachusetts?

In 1704 occurred the Battle of Blenheim. Most of us remember nothing about it except the last lines of Robert Southey's poem:

"And what was the use of it all?" asked little Tweedledee.
"I don't know," the man said, "but 'twas a famous victory."

Just one year before, not far from the battle-field, was born a red faced baby. His name was John Wesley.

Battles, kingdoms, fortunes—they are all part of the great human drama. But the thrill lies in the fact that a word dropped into the fertile mind of a boy, or a young couple starting a new home or a helpless infant uttering its first cry—these also have undying significance.

Any one of us, quite unwittingly, may be a part of a fam[illegible]ictory.

STEPHEN

Acts 6:7-10; 7:54-60
Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

Will it work? is a question that many ask when the ideals of Christianity are presented. The best answer is to turn to the lives of multitudes who are expressing the teachings of Jesus in their daily experiences. Stephen is one of the first to do this very thing and has the distinction of being called the earliest Christian martyr. Leaders in Jerusalem followed closely the activities of all propagandists just as the authorities do today in any country with an orderly form of government. And yet the mind must always be open to a fuller understanding of truth since the realm of facts can never be regarded as a closed book.

Stephen comes into prominence when the necessity of church organization arose. A poor fund was started, for part of the teachings of Jesus called for distribution by those who had any excess to those who were in need of daily bread.

Soon this servant of God became a marked man and was regarded as dangerous by those who were determined to stop the progress of this radical teaching of brotherly love that had been announced by Jesus.

The case was tried before the Sanhedrin and Stephen had to make his defense before the Seventy. He showed them that Jesus was the long looked for Messiah, and that He had been treated with base consideration, even as their forefathers had despised the instructions of the prophets. When the judges could not deny the facts they determined to kill the messenger. Sentence of death by stoning was pronounced and it was executed outside the city wall. In the midst of his death throes he prays as did Jesus, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge."

KEEP CHRISTMAS TREE TRADITION

New York State Forester Justifies Yuletide Decoration

There is no need to discourage the use of Christmas trees for holiday decorations to prevent the waste of the forests of this country, according to Professor R. S. Hosmer of the department of forestry at Cornell University, especially if proper care is used in growing and selecting the trees. In a radio talk from station WEAI on December 12, Professor Hosmer will tell how farmers and foresters are growing Christmas trees in abundance so the customs associated with their use may be preserved. He will also tell how Christmas trees may be appropriately used after they have fulfilled their holiday mission.

FARM BUREAUS GAIN IN MEMBERSHIP

New York county farm bureaus report two thousand more members enrolled on November 20 than at the same date last year, according to L. R. Simons, county agent leader at the central farm bureau office at Cornell University. Fourteen counties have already exceeded their last year's membership he says. The latest counties to complete enrollment are Sullivan, Seneca, Tioga and Otsego. Otsego with 1025 members, now has the largest enrollment.

The Scrap Book

"I DO NOT LOVE THEE."
By Caroline Elizabeth Sarah Norton

I do not love thee!—no! I do not love thee!
And yet when thou art absent I am sad;
And envy even the bright blue sky above thee,
Whose quiet stars may see thee and be glad.

I do not love thee!—yet, I know not why,
Whate'er thou dost seems still well done, to me:
And often in my solitude I sigh
That those I do love are not more like thee!

I do not love thee!—yet, when thou art gone,
I hate the sound (though those who speak be near)
Which breaks the lingering echo of the tone
Thy voice of music leaves upon my ear.

I do not love thee!—yet thy speaking eyes,
With their deep, bright, and most expressive blue,
Between me and the midnight heaven arise,
Oftener than any eyes I ever knew.

I know I do not love thee!—yet, alas!
Others will scarcely trust my candid heart;
And oft I catch them smiling as they pass,
Because they see me gazing where thou art.

HINTS FOR THE HOME

Dates

Dates are good eating just as they come from their package. They are equally good made into all sorts of desserts. And they may also be used for salads.

In salads, dates combine specially well with cream cheese. The cheese may be put into the core cavities and three or four dates stuffed thus may be laid on lettuce leaves, to be served with mayonnaise or French dressing.

Dates may also be combined with other fruits in salads—with orange and grapefruit and apple.

Here are some good recipes for various dainties making use of dates.

Date Pie

In the morning wash a pound of dates and let soak for five or six hours in cold water. Stew in the water they have been soaked in and when soft rub through a sieve. Add a cup of fresh or sour cream, two tablespoons of butter, yolks of two eggs, a half teaspoon of cinnamon, a half teaspoon of nutmeg, a dash of salt. Bake in a crust and then add a meringue made of the sweetened egg whites and put back in the oven to brown slightly.

Date Whip

Stew one cup of stoned and chopped dates in half a cup of boiling water until tender. Beat three egg whites stiff, and add one tablespoon of lemon juice and a third of a cup of sugar with half a teaspoon of salt. Beat again and then fold in the date pulp. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake for half an hour till brown and puffy.

Date Filling

Stone two pounds of dates and cut into small pieces. Cook to a thick paste with two cups each of sugar and water, a teaspoon of butter, and one-fourth nutmeg, grated.

CLUB MEMBERS WIN NATIONAL HONORS

Three New York State 4-H Club members have recently been awarded national honors for their excellence in club work, according to Professor W. J. Wright, state leader of Junior extension at the New York State College of Agriculture. Helen Strickland of Onondaga County was awarded the district championship in the national Moses and Wilson achievement contest. Herbert Smith of Monroe County won a similar contest for agricultural club members. Raymond DeHart of Cortland County, in addition to being declared state champion poultry club member, was awarded a $200 prize as research champion in a nation-wide poultry production contest. These members all received free trips to the national club congress held in Chicago, November 29 to December 6.

BILLBOARDS

The war against defacing the scenery and endangering the lives of highway travellers by advertising billboards is gaining new recruits daily. The latest is the Fox Film Company, which has announced its abandonment of billboard advertising in favor of newspapers. Newspapers are better advertising media, the Fox people say, and of that there is no possible question. If there were no other argument against billboards, that should be enough.

Safety on the highways depends upon every driver keeping his eyes on the road. There should be no signboards by the roadside, except those which call attention to the wares of the roadside retailer on the spot, direction markers and signs established by the highway authorities to indicate the condition of the road ahead.

"SPORT"

Two-thirds of what passes for "sport" in the United States is pure commercialism. Some of the inside of the "boxing game" was revealed the other day when a fight promoter sued Gene Tunney for half a million dollars, claimed as commission for arranging championship bouts. The court decided against the claim, but in the course of the testimony the whole business of prize-fight promotion was exposed as the money-making scheme which it is.

There isn't any reason why people who like boxing and wrestling matches, professional baseball or college football or any of the other so-called "sports" which are promoted for the big gate-money, should not go to see them. It is a degradation of the word "sport", however, to call such things sporting events. They are in the same class of entertainment as the circus and the movies.

DUPONT

Although related to one of the richest families in the world, T. Coleman Du Pont started in life with nothing but his bare hands and a keen mind. He worked as a coal miner, with pick and shovel, in a coal mine which he later owned. He loved to build, but cared little for the thing he had built after it was done. When the Du Pont powder industry was dying of dry rot and his cousins, who owned it, wanted to sell out, Coleman Du Pont offered to take hold and see what he could do. He built the business up into one of the most important industrial corporations in the world, and then retired to do something else.

A great American passed away when Coleman du Pont died at the age of 66.

MATING

The head of the Westfield, N. J., schools, told a convention of school nurses the other day that one of the things which high school students should be taught is how to select their future husbands or wives, and how to judge the characters of men and women.

That is extremely practical advice. The problem of mating wisely is the most difficult one which the young man or young woman faces, and the one in which he or she usually has had less help from parents than in any other of the problems of real life.

Three-quarters, at least, of all the marital difficulties which have brought the divorce rate up so high in this country, arise from the fact that young folks have had no instruction at all as to the qualities in the other sex which make for married happiness. In a completely civilized state, the proper mating of young human beings will be regarded as of equal importance with the proper mating of livestock.

CASH

Within the next three weeks the largest amount of cash newly put into circulation at one time will find its way into the tills of merchants all over the country. That is the annual distribution of the Christmas Clubs, maintained by 8,000 banks. Eleven million persons have been depositing small amounts every week since the first of the year, in order to accumulate a fund for Christmas buying. The average in these Christmas accounts is $56.40 this year, but the grand total runs to six hundred and twelve million dollars.

Not all of the money will be spent for Christmas presents. Some will go into permanent savings and investments, some to pay off debts incurred during the year, some for other purposes. About a third will be spent for gifts; but all of the six hundred million will change hands, and it is money changing hands that makes business good. The faster it changes hands, the better business is.

The stimulus of this immense sum starting to circulate again should go a long way toward restoring prosperity.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Giles Chittenham sets out to make Julie Farrow love him, intending to throw her over in revenge for the suicide of his brother Rodney, whom Julie had cast off. He succeeds, but finds that he has fallen desperately in love with her himself. Then he discovers that it was not this Julie Farrow, but her cousin of the same name, who had driven his brother to death. But Giles is married, to an American girl named Sadie Barrow, with whom he has not lived for a long time. Sadie unexpectedly turns up in London, at a party at Giles' mother's house, but both keep silent about their marriage.

Julie, disillusioned, enters into the wild night life of London to try to drown her anguish. Lawrence Schofield wants to marry her. Lombard, who had first introduced her to Chittenham, demands money from us with the threat that if he is not paid he will tell Schofield that Chittenham and Julie spent the night together on the St. Bernard Pass. Later Julie confesses to Chittenham that she loves him.

At a spiritualist seance at Giles' mother's house Sadie Barrow, his wife, suddenly goes blind. She calls to him and he responds, revealing the fact that she is his wife. Julie, who has sent Schofield away because of her love for Chittenham, goes home in despair. Chittenham follows her, but she sends him away and decides she will accept Schofield. She goes to Schofield's hotel. He is out, but she leaves a note for him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

He took her to a desk and gave her paper and a pen.

Julie wrote a few hurried lines.

"I didn't mean it, Lawrence dear. I want you to come back to me. Please ring me in the morning.—Julie."

It was a relief to have written that, and she half smiled as she thought how unnecessary it was to have added those last words. He would not ring her, he would come round, she was sure, he would come very early, perhaps even to-night if he was back in time, and then in the morning they would go away and make some sort of happiness together.

Julie tried hard not to think beyond to-morrow, but although she was so tired, and felt ready to drop, she could not sleep. She lay awake for hours listening to every sound.

In the early morning Julie dozed off to sleep, only waking when she heard the maid let herself into the flat and move about in the kitchen lighting the fire.

Presently she brought tea and a note. "It was lying on the mat when I came in, Miss."

Julie glanced at the handwriting, then sat up, her pulses jerking. It was from Lawrence Schofield. She was conscious of a warm glow of pleasure.

He loved her—it was something to be happy about in a world that held no real happiness. He must have brought it himself late last night. Perhaps, after all, it had been his footstep out side which she had heard.

She broke open the seal, the envelope felt unusually bulky, she drew out its contents—her own note which she had written last night in the hotel lounge, torn across and across into minute peices. That was all.

* * *

When Giles Chittenham got back to his mother's house she met him in the hall.

"Your wife has been asking for you all the evening. I said I would send you up as soon as you came in."

As he went upstairs he could hear Sadie's voice, high-pitched and hysterical, and he stopped for a moment, his hand clutching the stair rail, a terrible sense of loss and irrevocable fate gripping his heart.

When she heard Chittenham's voice, she turned her head towards the door, and stared at him with her wild, blind eyes.

"So you've come at last, have you?" she shrilled at him. "I suppose you've no use for me either, now I can't see."

She beat her hands frantically on the brass rail, and the nurse who had been standing beside her, caught and held them.

Sadie burst into wild sobbing.

"There's no hope for me, I know that I shall never see again as long as I live. I shall just sit here in the darkness till I die—till I die—and nobody cares—it doesn't matter to any one in all the world what becomes of me."

Giles crossed the room and touched her shoulder. "Sadie—"

She checked her sobbing with a sharp breath, and raised her face with pathetic eagerness to hear what he had to say. She tore her hands from the nurse's grasp, and groped in front of her till she touched Chittenham's coat, then she clutched it feverishly and began sobbing once more.

"Don't leave me, Giles—be kind to me—after all, I am your wife—"

Chittenham looked at the nurse.

"Please leave us."

When she had gone, he sat down beside his wife and put an arm round her.

"Sadie—you must try and be brave and listen to reason. Everything possible is being done and will be done, you know that."

Sadie was sobbing again.

"You don't really care for me—nobody cares for me. Though I can't see you I know by the feel of your arm that you're just trying to be kind, while all the time you're impatient and want to get away—"

"Don't leave me alone, Giles. You don't know what it's like to be left alone in this hideous darkness. I shall go mad if you leave me. I've often felt impatient with blind people—it's bored me to have to talk to them and try and be nice to them, but I know what it's like now, and I wish I'd been kinder. I suppose it's my punishment—and yet why should I be punished? I've never done any one any harm—"

"My dear, I want to be kind to you, but you make it so difficult for me—"

There was a little silence, which Sadie broke pitifully:

"There! I'm not crying any more, am I? I'm quite quiet now—please kiss me, Giles."

He kissed her affectionately enough, his heart torn with pity.

"You didn't kiss my lips," Sadie said—then she laughed brokenly, "Never mind! I suppose it's all I deserve."

She took her hands away from him and folded them in her lap to hide their trembling.

"Don't leave me, Giles. Be kind to me. After all, I am your Wife."

"Well—" she said after a moment as he did not speak. "What am I going to do? Or what are you going to do with me? I can't stay here, can I?"

Giles explained as gently as he could.

"In the morning I will take you away."

She interrupted quickly:

"Where will you take me? To live with you?"

"Not at once. To a nursing home. I have arranged with a specialist to see you—"

She interrupted again:

"It will be of no use. I know. I'm finished."

"Don't say that, Sadie."

She shuddered from head to foot.

"Well, go on—and afterwards? What then?"

"Then we must see. We must make arrangements."

"Arrangements! for what? For me to be led about by a nurse or a dog for the rest of my life?" Her terrible, hysterical sobbing began afresh.

Chittenham felt that he could bear no more. He called to the nurse and made his escape. His nerves were shaking as he went downstairs. He had never imagined anything so tragic as this last half hour.

He paced up and down the library, at his wit's end to know what to do. It was long past eleven and he had all the night to drag through.

If there was indeed no hope of Sadie ever being able to see again, how could he possibly leave her?

It would be inhuman, impossible, and yet to live with her—

Another knock at the door.

Chittenham turned impatiently.

"Oh, come in, come in."

"A gentleman to see you, Sir. I said you were very much engaged and could see no one, but he insisted, Sir, and says he will wait if he has to wait all night. The gentleman is Mr. Schofield, sir."

"Schofield!" The colour rushed to Chittenham's drawn face.

Schofield! the man whom Julie had said she would marry.

Chittenham was across the room in a stride.

"Is there anything the matter—Miss Farrow—"

In his desperate enxiety Giles forgot that this man in all probability knew nothing of his relations with Julie—and when he did not immediately reply, he broke out again hoarsely.

"If anything is wrong—"

"That all depends what you mean by 'wrong,'" Schofield answered slowly.

"Yesterday evening I had the doubtful honour of a visit from a man named Lombard. I have met him before—usually, I believe, in your company. I think I am right in assuming that he is a friend of yours?"

"He was—yes."

"Yes," he said, still in that level, unnatural voice—"I believe there has been a little upset between you—over a question of money—or should we call it the price of a woman's honour?"

There was a tragic silence. Chittenham's hands were clenched behind his back—and his face was grim.

"Perhaps you would like me to explain, Mr. Chittenham," Schofield went on, and now every sneering word was a studied insult, "or will it be sufficient if I just call you the cad and the blackguard which I know you to be?"

"I can only conclude that you are drunk," said Giles, sharply, "and that being so, the kindest thing I can do is to ring and have you shown out of the house."

He took a step towards the bell, but Schofield was too quick for him—

"That won't do," he said thickly. "I've seen that trick tried before. I'm not drunk and you damn well know I'm not. You're a younger man than I am, Chittenham, but I spoilt Lombard's beauty for him last night—he won't show his face amongst decent people again for some time to come, and I'll spoil yours if I—"

Chittenham caught his upraised arm and held it in a grip of steel.

"Don't be a damned fool," he said roughly, "you're no match for me, and you know you're not. If you've got anything to say, say it and be done. As far as Lombard goes, if you have given him a thrashing I'm in your debt, I owe him one myself—"

He released Schofield's arm, at the same time giving him a little push away from him, and for a moment the two men glared at one another silently, then Schofield broke down. He groped towards a chair and fell into it, hiding his face against his clenched hands. Giles watched him for a moment without speaking, then he fetched whisky and soda from a side table.

"Help yourself," he said. "If you've got anything against me, let's talk it out sensibly, instead of flying at one another's throats like wild beasts. I know what Lombard has told you—he tried his blackmailing games on me, and when he found it was no use he threatened to go to you. Good God, Schofield, what sort of a fool are you to believe a lying hound like that?"

Schofield raised his haggard face.

"What reason have I to disbelieve it?" he asked sullenly.

Giles shrugged his shoulders.

"Isn't your knowledge of Miss Farrow the best of all reasons?"

Schofield rose to his feet and began pacing up and down.

"Lombard was so sure—he had got every detail of the story—that you and Julie spent the night together at the St. Bernard Hostel—"

"So we did. It was impossible to get home. If all such unforeseen situations are given the same vile interpretation as you have given to this—"

Schofield's face flamed suddenly crimson.

"But I believe it!" he shouted. "I've always known that Julie was unhappy. She has hinted at trouble again and again. The reckless way she talks—all that pretended gaiety. It's never really deceived me, though for her sake I've let her think it has—Lombard had the whole story pat. He even spoke of your brother's relations with Julie's cousin—and of his suicide. He said that you mistook Julie for her cousin—he said that you intended punishing her for the way she treated your brother—he said that when you came back from St. Bernard you boasted to him of the easy conquest you had made—"

He never finished his sentence—for Chittenham's hands were at his throat, shaking him like a rat, almost choking him—

"By God—you dare say that to me—you talk of Lombard! how much better are you? Believing the first foul lies that come to you about a woman you're supposed to care for! You're not worth a thrashing—get out, that's all I've got to say to you—"

Still keeping one hand on Schofield, Chittenham dragged him to the door and flung it open—shouting to one of the servants: "James, show this gentleman out, and if he refuses to go send for the police."

He released Schofield so violently that he almost fell. He waited a moment—then went back into the library, shutting the door behind him.

He was shaking from head to foot with uncontrollable passion, and his face and head were burning.

That any man should dare to accuse him of such a thing—and to Julie of all people—the woman he adored! . . .

And again Chittenham lost himself in the thought of that night on St. Bernard—when they had been shut in on all sides by storm and snow and tempest and he had held Julie in his arms.

In a revulsion of feeling he wished passionately that he had made true the almost unspeakable accusation which Schofield had brought against him.

Julie would have been his then for ever—body and soul, and nothing could ever have altered it.

One New Yorker has figured out a way to prevent his dogs from being run over by automobiles. After seeing two pets killed in this manner, he decided to teach his own animals to take better care of themselves.

So he taught them—six of them—to obey traffic signals.

With a police whistle he taught them to cross the street at one blast, to stop at two. If they don't see a policeman they watch the traffic lights. Never, it is said, do they cross against a red light.

VALUE OF GAME BEING RECOGNIZED IN FORESTRY

The application of zoological principles to game management and the assignment of game management to its proper place in a program of scientific forestry is being duly stressed in leading schools where foresters are trained, says the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University.

Owing to the increasing influences of sportsmen, the growing popularity of recreation and the closer scrutiny of forestry as a business, foresters are being confronted more and more with the wild life problem as it relates to forestry. The meeting of the social with the practical side of forestry constantly is in a state of adjustment in field and classroom because in addition to value of recreation and sport, the forest generally must be considered as a definite source of revenue in which game should be included. This factor is revealed in the estimated value of game and fur-bearing animals taken in New York in one year which has been placed at $4,349,000.

Owners of forested and deforested lands who may be in doubt whether they can afford to develop their properties for the value of wood alone may be shown that the additional and immediate revenues from game would make such a project profitable. There are numerous sections in the country where a good market exists for game of various species. Game farms are already thriving in favorable locations and it is quite possible that more owners of forest land would undertake the raising of wild game for the market if their forest managers had technical knowledge in game propagation and protection.

The growth of this trend in professional education has been indicated in the establishment and allocation of fellowships at universities for the purpose of game studies. The New York State College of Forestry includes a department of Forest Zoology in the courses of which the relation of game and wild life to forest environment and principles governing management of these natural assets are among the points especially emphasized.

CHILL PIE DOUGH FOR FLAKY CRUST

Avoid Using Much Water and Work Quickly Advises College of Home Economics.

With the approaching holiday season, pie, the great American dessert, looms large upon the horizon of the housewife. She who knows the secret of making pies successfully is sure of pleasing both her family and her guests.

A recipe, suggested by the New York State College of Home Economics, for the plain pastry for a two-crust pie is one and a half cups of flour, one teaspoon of salt, six tablespoons of solid fat and two or three tablespoons of cold water. To insure flakiness of the pastry, all ingredients should be kept as cold as possible, and they should not be worked too much. The fat should be cut into the flour and salt with two knives, until the particles are about the consistency of coarse corn meal. Then the water is added a drop or two at a time and combined by tossing the mixture lightly with a fork. Only enough water should be used to make the ingredients stick together when pressed, as too much water toughens the dough just as will too much handling. The dough is chilled for a few minutes, and then rolled out with quick, light strokes to an eighth of an inch in thickness. The pie is baked in a hot oven (450 degrees F). However, if the filling is uncooked fruit the heat should be reduced to a moderate temperature after fifteen minutes.

A good pastry is tender, light and flaky, due to the melting of the flour-surrounded fat particles, which leaves the flour in layers and flakes. To prevent soggy undercrusts chill the crust and cook the filling before putting it in the shell. A hot oven during the first part of the baking period also helps to give a tender crust, and some cooks avoid the chance of sogginess by brushing the undercrust with egg-white and partially baking it before filling.

Window plants are sometimes a source of worry and almost always a joy—when they grow well. The bulletin L-14, "Window Plants" tells the conditions that are favorable to most of the common plants used in the window garden, and how to avoid the troubles that worry the gardener. CODLING MOTHS TO BE PLENTIFUL

S. W. Harman Predicts Heavy Carry-Over in Reviewing Season's Activities

The unusual weather conditions of the spring and summer months of 1930 have resulted in an unusually heavy carry-over of codling moth worms in many New York orchards with the probability of large numbers of moths next spring, declares S. W. Harman, entomologist at the State Experiment Station at Geneva, who is making a special study of the life history and control of this major apple pest.

With the warmest weather for May since 1922 and with abnormally high temperatures during June and July, the first brood of codling moths this year found almost ideal conditions for its development, says Mr. Harman. This led to the early maturity of the first brood and paved the way for an unusually large second brood, which in turn prospered to such an extent during the warm days of August and September to continue egg hatching up into October, a most unusual occurrence.

Added to this in the opinion of the Station specialist, many fruit growers failed to spray adequately to control the codling moth, particularly in view of the increase in numbers of the pest experienced this past season. Light applications and the omission of one or more applications resulted in poor control of the first brood of worms and afforded exceptional opportunities for heavy infestations by the second brood, it is said.

"The codling moth continues to be the insect of major importance in apple orchards in this State", says Mr. Harman, adding however, that "the experience of many growers has demonstrated, even in exceptional seasons, that it is susceptible to control by timely and thorough spraying".

REAR RACE HORSES IN IMMACULATE PADDOCK

Many a race horse of the future may be saved from becoming an "also ran" if a plan devised by the United States Department of Agriculture comes into common practice and colts are foaled in sanitary foaling barns and reared in sanitary paddocks and on clean pastures. Realizing that many a promising race horse "never runs his best" because of "hobo parasites" that have been "riding" him since colthood, parasitologists of the department, working with horse breeders, found a way to raise colts reasonably free from parasites and to keep them fairly free from worms throughout life.

Long before the birth of the prospective race horse, the dam is treated with drugs to remove internal parasites, thus eliminating one of the greatest dangers of contaminating the colt's surroundings. She is then placed on a clean pasture, kept sanitary by removing all manure droppings from it at frequent intervals. She foals in the sanitary barn and remains with her colt for two or three weeks on a clean paddock, from which manure is removed daily. The colt then goes with its mother to a clean pasture to grow up. Manure is removed once a week from the pasture to prevent the spread of parasites.

One prominent race-horse breeder, who formerly lost one or more foals yearly from parasites, has adopted the Department of Agriculture foal-raising program. Under the new system there have been no deaths among foals from parasitic infestation, little illness and only slight infestation with worms, he reports. One of his neighbors, likewise a prominent breeder, follows the only satisfactory substitute practice — that of giving all animals drug treatments at frequent intervals to rid them of parasites. As a result, his stock has comparatively little infestation. A third breeder in the same locality, who follows no sanitation program and resorts to medical treatment only occasionally, loses a colt from time to time and others are heavily infested.

Colts reared under the sanitation program were heavier at one year of age than those raised in previous years, without regard to parasite control. The method of rearing may determine whether a colt will be a low-priced horse, a moderate-priced horse, or one that wins thousands of dollars and is valued at thousands more.

BICYCLE DAYS

SAILBOATS and steamboats, locomotives, horse cars and trolley cars—all these had played their part in the development of New York. Now, during the "eighties" and "nineties," a new kind of vehicle carried the city onward still another step. As early as 1877, the high wheel had made its appearance on the streets and even before that the old "boneshaker" was not unknown, but it was not until the coming of the low-wheeled "safety" that the craze really took hold. Then the influence of tens of thousands of cyclists began to make itself felt with power. Cobblestones gave way to asphalt, along which the endless procession could speed with pleasure, and recreation parks were created far enough away to meet the demand for outings. Bronx, Pelham Bay, Van Cortlandt and other parks owed much of their planning to the bicycle vogue; and along beautiful new Riverside Drive, on almost any summer evening, a myriad of twinkling headlights moved in a glowing, shifting, dreamy maze. In those days, the Duke of Marlborough, perhaps on courtship bound, was arrested for "scorching on his bike," and young Alfred E. Smith won his first popular title of "Coaster King."

But the city had problems as well as pleasures. A Russian Czar, Alexander III, began to persecute the Jews in his empire, and thousands of them fled to New York, where they added to the difficulties of the congested districts, particularly of the East Side. The problem from over-immigration was already acute, for races had formed the habit of huddling in separate communities, and crowded tenement houses of the "dumb-bell" airshaft design offered a direct challenge to the city's health. In 1879, a mass meeting of citizens in Cooper Union resulted in the formation of the "Improved Dwelling Association" and the making of sanitary laws; while in Brooklyn, Alfred T. White set a new standard with his home buildings constructed around a central court. Castle Garden had served for a time as an immigrant station, and it was not until 1892 that Ellis Island was purchased and fitted up for the reception of the oncoming wave of foreigners.

Perhaps it was the big Brooklyn Bridge that gave the city a greater urge toward permanence and beauty in its buildings. At any rate, the old brownstone fronts began to give way to the "chateau" type of mansion after the middle of the century and there was greater enthusiasm for public monuments and edifices. St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Fifth Avenue between Fiftieth and Fifty-first Streets, was dedicated in 1879 by Cardinal McClosky, whose father had given so generously to the founding of St. James Cathedral, Brooklyn's first Catholic Church. There soon followed the Temple Beth-El, and the Episcopal Church of St. Thomas. The Architectural League of New York dates from 1881, with Meade, McKim, Tiffany, Le Brun, St. Gaudens, Lefarge and such other first-rate names among its membership.

In the very year that marked the completion of Brooklyn Bridge, 1883, the first Metropolitan Opera House was opened with a brilliant performance of "Faust"; and a gala benefit was held in the Fourteenth Street Academy of Music to provide a pedestal for the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," a gift of the people of France to this nation. Then, on November 26, the centennial of British evacuation was celebrated by placing a statue of Washington, donated by the merchants of New York, on the steps of the Sub-Treasury Building, the site of his inauguration as first President under the Constitution of the United States.

Another memorial, planned in 1885, was designed to commemorate still another President whose death stirred the city's deepest emotions. Ulysses S. Grant, under shadow of death, spent his last days painfully writing his memoirs to provide an estate for his wife. For his remains a small tomb was erected on the banks of the Hudson River. To this site, a mourning cortage, six miles in length, bore the body on August 7, after it had lain in state for three days in the draped rotunda of the City Hall. In 1897, the present stately monument, although not completed, was dedicated to his memory.

"Liberty" mounted her pedestal on October 28, 1896. Senator Evart's speech was left unfinished because a premature signal lowered the veiling flag when he had scarcely begun. Through the campaign efforts of the "New York World," which had been so active in securing funds for the pedestal, the statue was equipped to shed a radiant electric light through the torch and tiara.

This Week in Washington

BY RADFORD MOBLEY
AUTOCASTER WASHINGTON BUREAU

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2—Official Washington again prepares to send out the season's greetings from the nation's capital but there is one man who cannot afford to send Christmas cards even to his intimate friends. The man denied this pleasant holiday privilege is Herbert Hoover.

The reason no one is going to receive a card from the famous resident on Pennsylvania Avenue is obvious. If President and Mrs. Hoover began to send out cards there is no telling where it might stop. It would take a busy squad of secretaries to address greetings even to the thousands of high party officials and leaders over the United States.

The President might begin with the supreme court, but where he would end would be difficult to say. If it became known that Christmas cards would issue from the White House it is certain that every member of congress would have an extensive list of friends he wished to be favored. Before all requests were gratified President Hoover would undoubtedly be called upon to send out millions of cards. The expense of course would be enormous and it would probably take the White House secretariat many weeks to fill a small part of the demands.

* * *

Although it sends no cards, the White House receives probably the largest and most interesting collection of greetings in the world. From all parts of the inhabited globe, messages of good cheer pour into the executive offices for many days before and after December 25. Days are required to open all of the cards and arrange them for President Hoover's inspection.

Some of the greetings which the president and his wife will receive on December 25 will be elaborate and expensive, perhaps hand-painted, costing several dollars. Others will be plain, simple, from some tiny place in a far-distant state. All of them are handled with equal respect by the White House secretariat.

* * *

Two years ago, before they entered the White House, President and Mrs. Hoover sent to their close friends a small card on which was engraved in red script the names—"Herbert Hoover and Lou Henry". The card also bore the names of the two sons and Mrs. Herbert Hoover, Jr., and the two Hoover grandchildren. It was neat and tasteful. Needless to say those on the Hoover list at the time now prize those little cards very highly.

The joyous privilege of designing another such card was denied the Hoovers last year and will be this year. The White House does, however, respond to those who send Christmas cards to the President. Shortly after Christmas a reply card, stating simply "thank you for the Christmas greetings", is mailed to the senders.

Probably more Christmas cards are handled through the White House Office Building postoffice than through any similar postal unit in the United States. The postmaster in the building is unable to make an estimate of the number of cards he is handling. The total runs into millions. Last year during the few days preceding Christmas an average of fifteen sacks an hour were handled by the White House building postal employees, who were kept busy until ten o'clock at night with incoming and outgoing mail.

Christmas cards for senators and representatives are purchased thru the stationery rooms of the Capitol. It was estimated last year that approximately 150,000 cards were obtained through the House document room alone. The cards cost from 1½ cents to 11 cents, the average being about 3 cents a card.

Rep. Robert L. Bacon, of New York, has probably the largest mailing list of any congressman. Last year he sent out more than 25,000 Christmas cards. Many representatives exceed the 10,000 mark.

Probably the most elaborate card from the capitol during recent years has been sent out by Edmund F. Erk, secretary to former Representative Stephen G. Porter of Pennsylvania. Each year Mr. Erk has sent out a card which is really a beautiful engraved booklet. He has made a careful study of some phase of governmental life or history and reproduced its spirit in his Christmas greetings. Two years ago Erk's card contained a reproduction of the fundamental documents of our government. Last year he emphasized the friendly treaties the United States has made with other countries to point out progress in attaining peace on earth and good will toward men. This Christmas Mr. Erk will sit as a member of Congress, having been elected to office after the lamented death of Rep. Porter. He will probably be high among those members who use Christmas cards to express affection and appreciation to their constituents.

HOT SALADS FOR COLD WEATHER MEALS

A hot salad for winter meals is a new dish that all the family will enjoy. Instead of serving beets and cabbage day after day in the same old familiar ways, add interest and variety to the meal by a hot beet or cabbage salad made deliciously tart with sour cream. To make hot beet salad mix together one pint of diced cooked beets, two tablespoons of vinegar or lemon juice, one tablespoon of sugar, salt and paprika to taste. Heat thoroughly, and just before serving add one-half cup of sour cream. Garnish with a little crisp parsley or lettuce.

To make hot cabbage salad slice one pint of cabbage, cook it in rapidly boiling water until tender and drain it. Add two tablespoons of vinegar, one tablespoon of butter and salt and paprika to taste. Beat an egg yolk, mix it with one-half cup of sour cream, add this to the cabbage and heat slowly, preferably over hot water. Serve at once. More vinegar may be used if a more tart flavor is desired. This salad is particularly good with boiled ham.

Rabbit Hunting Popular as Cottontail Remains Principal Wild Game of America

By Caleb Johnson

Consider the rabbit.

And consider it one of the most important game animals in the United States today.

This is the plea of the American Game Protective association, which points out that this little animal, counted upon to furnish sport to millions when other quarry fails is not receiving due recognition from hunters.

"And beware", is the warning, "for the rabbit is the future bet of the game producer. The tremendous buffalo herds are gone. The wild pigeon has passed within the memory of of many living sportsmen. The elk is restricted in most sections because of need of pasturage for stock. The wild fowl supply is largely a matter of the presence of sufficient lakes and marshes for breeding places and the grouse supply is constantly attacked by certain parasitical diseases most difficult to control.

"So Hunter, take heed. The rabbit is the mainstay of millions who pay for hunting licenses and who expect to get something in return for it."

Few people realize how invaluable as a game animal the rabbit is, the association declares. In certain of our thickly populated areas, from 1,000,000 to 3,000,000 rabbits are taken yearly as game and food. Probably one-half of the men and boys who go gunning take out a license principally to hunt rabbits. Rabbits of one variety or another make up fifty per cent or more of the bag of the average hunter; and most particularly is this true of the residents of the small town and the farm. The farmer and the farmer's boy have hunted rabbits from time immemorial, and they will continue to do so for years to come.

It is in recognition of these facts that state game commissioners and national protective associations are putting forth great effort to increase the rabbit denizens of this country. Nature also does its best by providing 5 or 7 young ones per litter, but not all these grow to maturity. That litter soon dwindles to 4, 3, 2 and often none if discovered by the rabbits natural enemies, hawks, owls, dogs and cats. So very often the generosity of Mother Nature is all for naught.

The rabbit family, including both rabbits and "hares" is most widely represented by the cottontail. In the northern states and the higher country live the snowshoe rabbits, on the plains the jack rabbits. There is also a northern hare and a southern swamp rabbit. And in all these localities where the rabbit thrives, and that means all over the nation, the animal plays an important part in the economic and sport life.

One of the reasons why rabbits are becoming more valuable is that, as the country becomes settled, it becomes increasingly difficult to provide and protect feathered game. The hunter must have something to hunt, and as wild geese, ducks and grouse become scarcer, more and more gun sights are leveled at the rabbits. Game birds and most big game animals are difficult to raise in sufficient quantities to provide suitable hunting near thickly populated centers. Only in the mountainous and more brushy districts, as a rule, can feathered and larger hoofed game be kept numerous where there is much hunting.

But the rabbit does well nearly everywhere. On the edge of the country woodlots, in the swamps of the south, in populated areas often within the confines of large towns they are surprisingly plentiful. So as time goes on and civilization drives out of existence other game animals and birds, the rabbit, because of its adaptability, will become the game animal of the country.

But even he needs protection from enemies which ever threaten to conquer, so today numerous state commissions are purchasing thousands of cottontail and snowshoe rabbits and setting them loose at opportune times in likely places under the supervision of kindly farmers, game conservationists and sportsmen.

Efforts are being made to use rabbits to replenish "game-depleted" areas. In Kansas, Nebraska and western states where they are plentiful, rabbits are caught alive, boxed and shipped to those regions where they are bred to bolster up the disappearing supply of game animals.

The association names three varieties of game that, with the proper protection, food and cover, can be increased and raised in a wild state to almost unbelieveable numbers. They are white-tailed deer, ring-necked pheasants and rabbits.

It is on these three species that the sportsmen of the future will have to depend. With a national population fast reaching the 150-000,000 mark, only the breeding and producting of game by hundred thousands will have any effect. The importance of giving attention to varieties that will reproduce most prolifically is most important.

And all signs seem to say, "Look to the rabbit".

KILLS INSECTS BEST WITH DUST

Malarial Mosquitoes Controlled With Paris Green Mixture Released From Airplane.

The use of airplanes to spread a fine dust over large areas of swampy land, has proved successful in controlling malarial mosquitoes in the south, according to L. C. Woodruff of the New York State College of Agriculture.

In a recent talk from WEAI at Cornell Mr. Woodruff said that the use of an oil film on the surface of swampy regions which could not be drained was found futile because of the size of the areas and because of its effect on other water life. The use of a fine dust of Paris green has been found effective in killing the larvae or "wrigglers" which feed on the surface of the area, without harming other swamp life.

Rasmussen Sees No Potato Shortage Though Crop is Surely Larger Than Last Year's

Carlot shipments of potatoes show that people are eating as many potatoes, if not more, than last year, says Professor M. P. Rasmussen of the New York State College of Agriculture in his November summary of the potato marketing situation. The key to potato prices for the remainder of the season undoubtedly lies in the business situation. If employment increases during the next two or three months, it is likely that potato prices will quickly reflect such improvement, Professor Rasmussen predicts.

The unusually mild weather in October with potato vines remaining green and the tubers growing and adding weight all through the month made a considerable increase in the United States Department of Agriculture estimates. Practically all of the late increase came in the extreme eastern and far western states, making an increase of sixteen million bushels over the October estimate. The estimate now shows almost nine million bushels more than the 1929 crop but thirteen million bushels or about three per cent less than the average crop of the past five years.

Idaho with twenty-five million bushels, has the largest crop ever grown in that state, and almost eighteen million bushels more than last year. The entire crop in the far western states is now estimated to be sixteen million bushels larger than last year. The states from Michigan to Nebraska have about eleven million bushels less than in 1929. In the east the increase of New York and Vermont offset the losses of Maine and Pennsylvania by nearly one million bushels.

The Canadian crop is estimated by the Canadian department of agriculture to be seventy-nine million bushels, compared with sixty-seven million bushels in 1929. The increased tariff of forty-five cents a bushel together with the low prices, however, seems to be keeping Canadian potatoes out of the United States this year. Only 156 carloads of Canadian potatoes have been imported up to November 1 of this year compared with 1318 carloads to the same date last year, according to Professor Rasmussen.

Even on the basis of the November estimate, the 1930 crop must be reckoned as among the small crops for the 1930 per capita supply of potatoes in the United States of 2.98 bushels is still below the normal supply of 3.21 bushels for each person.

OVERWORK

He came into my office last week, eyed me suspiciously, I thought; acted as if he'd fly out if the least thing happened that was unusual to him. He gave his age as 52, had been behind a counter all his life; hadn't had the time to get married, or to attempt anything not directly beneficial to himself. He had within the last month sold his business, and felt bereaved by so doing. He was of foreign extraction, weazened, tremulous, greedy-looking. Examination revealed no organic disease whatever.

But there are human disorders graver even than organic disease. Here was a man with a worn-out nervous system. Every thought of rest and recreation had forsaken him long ago. He had one obsession—that he might be compelled to go to the poorhouse or starve to death before his time.

I all but lost my temper when he skittered all over the room as I tried to take his blood-pressure—made more noise than a frightened child—this man of over fifty. I told him he ought to be turned over my knee and warmed with a bed slat. He looked at the door, wistfully I thought, and I told him he was perfectly welcome to decamp; go back to "business" and wind up in the bug-house! This aroused his ire a little, and he told me he hadn't been born yesterday; that he knew what he was doing. I congratulated him for his first natural expression in my presence, and told him he had probably been born, but he had never lived—he had just existed! We finally agreed and shook hands—on a schedule of conduct for him.

There is a man, a perfectly good man—headed straight for the insane asylum, unless he reforms right now, and it may be too late. Why is he in this condition? Just the mad chase for a dollar! He has it—at the price of all health and comfort. There are thousands of good men, doing the same foolish thing. This letter is just a warning; learn to rest while it is today.

Action By The National Grange

Taken at the 64th Annual Session at Rochester, Nov. 12-21.

The final session of the 64th annual convention of the National Grange brings to a close the greatest gathering of farm people ever assembled in the United States, with an attendance of 15,000 folks straight from the farms, and with 32 states represented in the voting body. The class of 11,125 persons initiated into the 7th degree of the Grange breaks all former records in the fraternal history of America, and this great event in the ritualistic procedure of the Grange was the occasion for interest and enthusiasm that will be far-reaching in effect.

The fact that in the midst of an agricultural and financial depression of universal extent, this big farm fraternity could stage an event of such magnitude has attracted the attention of the entire nation, and furnishes ample evidence of the vitality and substantial character of the Grange. Furthermore, the Rochester convention discussed many of the important problems of present day affairs and issued clear-cut, emphatic declaration of its beliefs and its policies. Remarkable also was the fact that this great delegate body—though composed of men and women from states extending from Maine to California, and from the Dominion of Canada to the Carolinas—fixed nearly all its policies by unanimous vote, and in no instance was opinion widely enough divided to require a roll call. A fine spirit of harmony pervaded every one of the ten days' sessions, running true to form in this big fraternity of the rural people.

The speakers included Secretary Arthur M. Hyde of the National Department of Agriculture; James P. Stone, vice-chairman of the Federal Farm Board, and Charles S. Wilson of the same board; Miss Jeanette Rankin of Montana, ex-Congresswoman; and Norman Lombard of the Stable Money Association.

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York was one of the guests of the Rochester session, and delivered an address in the big meeting at the city armory, attended by thousands of people from a wide range of territory. Governor Roosevelt, a Grange member for 20 years, was also one of the 11.125 initiates to receive the supreme degree of the Order, the latter being conferred five times in a single day, at the Beautiful Masonic Temple in Rochester.

Program features of the Grange convention included educational programs of wide variety, a radio broadcast, with a nation-wide hookup reaching thousands of farm homes in all the states; attendance of the Grange people in a body at one of the city churches on Sunday morning; and three business sessions daily for more than a week, all indicating how industrious a body the National Grange is when in annual session.

The Rochester preparations for the convention were most complete and the facilities there available for handling a gathering of such size were ample and satisfactory. The people of Rochester showed themselves most hospitable, and universal pleasure was expressed by all the Grange visitors at the way they were taken care of. It was voted to hold the annual session of November, 1931, within the state of Wisconsin, the city later to be determined.

An outstanding event of the big convention was the afternoon's public session, devoted exclusively to the subject of cooperation, when this strong list of speakers was presented: C. A. Ewing, president of the National Livestock Marketing Association; Fred H. Sexauer, president of the Dairymen's League; C. E. Huff, president Farmers' National Grain Corporation; Howard E. Babcock, manager Grange League Federation Exchange. The same afternoon a stirring address on "The Spiritual Mission of the Grange" was delivered by Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer.

Immediately following the session, steps were taken to promptly put into effect the pronouncements made at Rochester, and to enlist in the program of the National Grange the hearty support of the 8,000 subordinate branches of the Grange, in which there is an alert, duespaying membership of nearly 800,000 people.

Outstanding Policies of the National Grange

1. Continue the Grange determination to seek Equality for Agriculture, through
   (a) Enactment of the Export Debenture Plan.
   (b) Proper tariff adjustments and similar efforts.
   (c) Development of Cooperative Marketing.
2. Support for the Federal Farm Board in every constructive program to improve marketing facilities.
3. Definite tax reform by application of the budget system to township and county expenditures; extension of the state income tax policy; distribution of a portion of the Federal income tax for the aid of rural schools and roads; and a taxing program based upon ability to pay and upon benefits received.
4. Support of constructive efforts to stabilize the value of the dollar and to discourage undue currency inflation and deflation.
5. Creation of a Bureau of Conservation, in the Department of Agriculture, to embrace forestry, public parks, irrigation, reclamation and water powers, and kindred interests.
6. Oppose speculation and short selling in food products, except for legitimate hedging purposes.
7. Strict enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and strengthening of all enforcing agencies.

The National Grange Favors

Extension of rural electrification on such basis as will encourage increased service to farm homes.

Federal assistance to farm cooperatives in bridging the gap between producer and consumer.

A rigid policy of conservation of the natural resources of the nation, especially water powers; the use of water sites for the generation of electrical power to be controlled in the interest of all the people.

Organizing State Tax Conferences to study tax probems, with leading organizations and industries invited to cooperate.

Support of U. S. Department of Agriculture in its efforts to exclude dangerous insects and plant pests from the country, and favoring increased protection from such pests to agricultural and horticultural activities, with minimum interference with the efficient distribution of such products to the consuming public.

Making a thorough study in traffic laws, looking toward more equitable freight rates for the farmer and a reduction of the present heavy freight-carrying charges.

Extending all possible aid thru the Federal Farm Board to growers of beans and other farm products, not yet included in assistance by said Farm Board.

Deportation of aliens convicted of violating the criminal laws of state or nation, especially those relating to narcotics and intoxicating liquors.

A Court of International Justice as a means of settling international disputes.

Enlarging the scope of service of the Federal Farm Loan System.

Increased construction of farm-to-market roads.

A policy of establishing freight rates on livestock to provide the greatest possible range of markets therefor.

Adoption of uniform traffic signals and uniform placing of same in the different states.

Construction of Great Lakes-to-Sea Waterway.

Protection of shade trees along public highways and further tree planting where needed.

Approvial of the policies of President Hoover in the outlawing of war and the establishment of World Peace.

Granting independence to the Philippine Islands, and legislation to prevent further immigration of their people to the United States.

Limiting the length of automobile trucks and trailers on the public highways.

Support for the Pan-American Institute for Reciprocal Trade.

Proper regulation of motion pictures.

Establishment of a National Agricultural Day.

A campaign of education against the use of cigarettes by the youth of the land, and especially urging the cooperation of colleges and other educational institutions toward this end.

The National Grange Opposes

All efforts to nullify existing laws for the enforcement of the 18th Amendment and punishment of offences thereunder.

Further encroachments upon the natural resources of the country by private interests and monopolistic groups.

The use of oleomargarine as a substitute for butter in government institutions.

Any modification of the deferential between livestock and dressed meat products, which will curtail the range of markets for livestock.

All blanket bond issues, without liability limit, which tend to throw a burden of debt upon land in irrigation, drainage, or other improvement districts.

Corporation farming, or other formation of centralized agriculture, which may tend to diminish individual ownership and interest.

The payment, directly or indirectly, by any private citizen, chamber of commerce, farm organization, or other group, of any portion of the salary and expenses of Federal Extension Workers.

The attitude of the United States Chamber of Commerce in its hostility to the efforts of the farm groups to secure Equality for Agriculture through legislative enactment.

STATE PRODUCE IN NEW YORK CITY

New York, Nov. 28—The sharp drop in temperature was undoubtedly responsible for a better demand on many lines of southern and western fresh vegetables this morning, says the New York office of the State Department of Agriculture and Markets, and in consequence values strengthened with very noticeable advances on cauliflower, stringbeans, green peas, lettuce and spinach.

The undertone of the market was firmer on state red and yellow onions but buying was only moderate. Trucked-in red and yellow onions in sacks of 100 pounds jobbed out from the stores of commission merchants at mainly $1.50.

Attractive quality, well-packed and graded apples met a moderate outlet in a steady market. On the downtown piers western New York, McIntosh, N. Y. U. S. grade No. 1, 2½ inch peddled out at $6.00 to $6.50 per barrel. Rhode Island greenings, N. Y. U. S. No. 1, 3 inch, brought $5.50 to $6.00.

Turkeys

The Thanksgiving turkey market cleaned up very well. The cold snap arrived too late to be of much value to it. Turkeys retailed at various prices throughout the metropolitan area. Prices ranged from 20 to 45 cents, depending upon size, quality, condition and appearance.

Live Poultry

Receipts of live poultry were light. Carried over stocks were heavy. Trading was slow at lower prices. Fowls, leghorn 17 to 20 cents; fancy, 20 to 22 cents; colored 20 to 23 cents; fancy 24 to 25 cents.

Country Dressed Calves

Fresh receipts were light to moderate all week. Trading improved as the week advanced. The market was steady. Choice 14 to 15 cents, good 12 to 14 cents, medium 9 to 12 cents.

Butter, Cheese and Eggs

The butter market was firm. Higher score 34½ to 35 cents per pound.

The cheese market was steady. New York State fresh fancy flats 20 cents per pound.

The egg market was steady to firm. Nearby white eggs and current collections mixed colors were unchanged in price. Brown eggs advanced 2 cents per dozen. Nearby white best grade 45 to 47 cents; average extras 42 to 43 cents; nearby hennery browns, top quality, 48 to 54 cents.

Livestock

No steers nor bulls on sale. Few cows strong at 25 cents higher. Good grades up to $6.75; common to medium $4.00 to $5.50; low cutters $2.00 to $3.50. Vealers in light supply, around 50 cents higher. Good to choice New York $11.50 to $14.00; medium $8.00 to $11.00; culls and common $5.50 to $7.50. Hogs around 25 cents higher. Choice 160 pounds $9.25; good 260 pounds $8.15. Lambs in light supply, 25 to 50 cents higher. Good New York lambs $9.00; medium $7.00 to $8.50 common throughouts $5.50. Ewes nominal.

Hay

Receipts at the various points were extremely light but were sufficient for the demand which was not very active and prices have held steady to a shade firmer. Large bales, timothy, No. 1, $27 to $28; No. 2, $25 to $26; No. 3, $23 to $24.

HARDENBURG TELLS HOW TO BUY SPUDS

Cut Potato to See Indication of Cooking Quality — Varieties Are Alright, He Says, It's the Weather That Makes Difference.

Some potatoes that sluff badly when boiled may be excellent when baked, says Professor E. V. Hardenburg of the New York State College of Agriculture. This tendency is not common to any particular variety, as many people have thought, but comes from a seasonal and soil problem. In seasons of drought, with alternating periods of rain, both the external and internal appearance of the tubers is affected, he says.

There is a distinct difference between market quality and eating quality. Market quality is fixed by the appearance of the potato and freedom from defects that cause waste in preparation for the table. Common defects are scab, sunburn, wireworm and grub injury, dry rot, cracks, hollow heart, cuts and bruises. Ordinary scab, unless exceptionally deep, is not serious because of waste and should not prejudice the buyer if the potatoes are alright otherwise. Wireworm injury is probably the most serious injury and is perhaps most easily overlooked. Since wireworms usually eat deeply into the potato, even a few wireworm holes may make a tuber worthless.

The buyer on the open market could not detect good cooking qualities without sampling, examining the interior of the potato and perhaps even making a cooking test. Cut across the potato, he advises, and look for a uniform white color and texture. Whiteness of flesh and mealiness are closely associated, as are whiteness and high starch content. Where there are light and dark layers in the potato the lighter rings, because of the higher starch content rupture first in cooking and sluff off while the darker rings or portion is only partially cooked. Where there is unevenness in potatoes it is best to cook by steaming, either with or without the jackets, or to boil with the jackets on. According to the college of home Economics, he says, steaming is after all the best way to conserve the food value of potatoes.

Since the American Giant variety, once known as the great American cake of soap, is no longer grown, most of the standard varieties differ little in their eating qualities. Cooking tests of potatoes grown on the well-drained muck soils show quality equal to the same varieties grown on upland soil. In general, the lighter, better aerated soils insure complete maturity of the potato plant and result in better eating quality than the heavier soil types. But heavy soils can and do grow good potatoes.

After emptying a jar of fruit, wash and dry the jar, put the top on at once, and put the jar on a shelf reserved for the purpose. When canning season arrives next year much trouble in gathering and matching jars and covers will be saved.

To loosen dirt and save time and wear in laundering dirty garments, wet them, rub soap on, roll them up, and soak them in a small quantity of water over night.

APPLES MAKE MANY DESSERTS

A typical New York State dessert, wholesome, simply made, and popular with both the children and adults is maple apples, says the New York State College of Home Economics. Select eight good baking apples of uniform size, wash, core but do not pare them. Put them in a baking dish and pour over them one cup of maple sirup and one cup of water. Add two tablespoons of butter and bake until the apples are soft and the sirup is thick. Serve them plain or with a spoonful of whipped cream.

Apple meringue is another simple and attractive dessert. To make it: soak one teaspoon of gelatine in two tablespoons of cold water for five minutes; then dissolve by setting the dish containing it in hot water. To one cup of thick sweetened apple sauce add the melted gelatine and two tablespoons of sugar, a pinch of salt, one-half teaspoon vanilla, and one egg white beaten stiff. Beat all together and heap the mixture in a sherbet glass. Serve with soft custard or whipped cream.

Apple sherbet may be made by boiling together one and three-fourths cups of sugar and one cup of water for ten minutes. When cool, add four cups of apple juice and one-half cup of lemon juice and freeze to a mush. Add one cup of thick, sour, whipped cream and continue freezing until firm enough to serve.

"Jim Ham" Comes Back

Hon. James Hamilton Lewis, for years most picturesque figure in Washington, goes back to the Senate fter several years' absence.

Suggests Rations That Lower Costs

Morrison Says, Use Wheat, Barley and Oats to Replace More Expensive Corn and Hominy for Dairy feeds.

New York State dairymen can cut feed costs by substituting wheat, barley and oats for corn and hominy feed in dairy rations, at present prices, and by feeding a grain mixture with a protein content that corresponds to the roughage fed, advises Professor F. B. Morrison, head of the department of animal husbandry at the New York State college of agriculture. He suggests formulas for use with various types of roughage for feeding dairy cows.

In these formulas wheat or barley may be used, depending on the local prices. For dairy cows these grains have substantially the same value, ton for ton. Since wheat is a heavy, concentrated feed, it is best not to use more than 600 pounds of ground wheat per ton of dairy feed. Also some bulky feed, like oats or wheat bran, should be included in the mixture.

Ground rye may be substituted for wheat or barley in these formulas. Since rye is usually not quite as palatable as these grains, it is best not to use more than 300 to 500 pounds of rye per ton of feed.

When little or no legume hay is used, feed a 24 per cent total protein mixture, as: 300 pounds of ground wheat or barley; 300 pounds of ground oats; 350 pounds of bran; 350 pounds of gluten feed; 400 pounds of cottonseed meal; 200 pounds of linseed meal; and 100 pounds of gluten meal.

With mixed clover and timothy hay and corn silage use a 20 per cent total protein feed, as: 600 pounds of ground wheat or barley; 600 pounds of ground oats; 300 pounds of gluten feed; 200 pounds of cottonseed meal; and 100 pounds of soy bean meal or gluten meal. With clover hay and corn silage only 18 per cent total protein is needed in the grain mixture, made as follows: 700 pounds of barley or wheat; 700 pounds of oats; 200 pounds of gluten feed; 200 pounds of linseed meal; and 200 pounds of cotton meal.

With alfalfa hay and corn silage the grain mixture can be reduced to 16 per cent total protein, containing: 800 pounds of ground barley; 800 pounds of ground oats; 200 pounds of gluten feed; 100 pounds of linseed meal; and 100 pounds of cottonseed meal.
